

WHO SHOULD USE THESE AND WHEN?

These are simple activities for residents with limited or no cognitive impairment to use independently, or with the support of staff, volunteers or friends or family if cognitive impairment is more developed.

They can be used in a group setting, 1-to-1 with family, friends or staff, or in isolation – all that's needed is a pencil and eraser!

HOW CAN YOU INTRODUCE OR SUPPORT THE ACTIVITIES?

There are images of objects from the Wallace Collection on each activity sheet side, as well as basic facts (like title, artist, medium, etc.), a short paragraph about the object and a “spark question”.

APART FROM THE RESIDENT DOING THE ACTIVITY, YOU CAN HELP THEM ENGAGE FURTHER BY:

Discussing the theme (like “joy” or “letter-writing”) of the activity sheet with them.

Starting a conversation with the “spark question”.

Looking at the object image and asking them what they see – is it similar or different from the description?

Helping them to search the Wallace Collection website for more hi-res images and information. <https://wallacelive.wallacecollection.org/eMP/eMuseumPlus>

Asking if they would like additional activities, contact Holly Power for many more options. holly.power@wallacecollection.org

Pieter-Paul Rubens, The Rainbow Landscape, c.1636

What do rainbows represent for you?

Rubens painted this landscape of the countryside around his beloved home, Het Steen in Belgium, late in his life and career. Farming tasks are being finished at the end of a typical day. A rainbow, representing peace and contentment, arches above.

"Raindrops keep fallin' on my head, but that doesn't mean my eyes soon will be turning red..."

"Red and yellow and pink and green, purple and orange and blue..."

"Somewhere over the rainbow, way up high, and the dreams that you dreamed of really do..."
